Mr. Clay, wiff, and because he was the whig car cy, and because Georgia Wings election, our opponents attempted to s upon us, a party, an advocacy of principles embraced in that bill. In other words, whitever Mr. Clay was in favor of, or opposed to, we were in favor of, or opposed to. No such thing! The principles around by Mr. Clay on the Tariff were every one of them, almost in the same language, advanced by Mr. Polk. Between the two candidates, there was not a particle of difference in their avowed principles. To the Tariff, theen, of 1842, while we supported Mr. Clay, who advocated it, we were opposedso were the whig members from Georgia, for they voted against it, as did our Senator, the Hon. J. M. Berrien.

We again come to the Tariff of 1846. As Har as we have had an opportunity of investigating its items, we pronounce it but little or no better than the Tariff of 1812. As a member of Congress, we should have voted against to that ground, if on no other; but from 180tives of policy-for the better regulation hereafter of the popular will-we wish it may ipass and become a law.

The judgment which an indignant people will pass upon them, (the Democrats,) will amply repay the Whigs of Georgia, who, as a party, have been so often and so falsely charged with favoring a high protective Tariff!"

It further thus characterizes the new law:

"With features in it somewhat preferable to the act of 1812 is yet as obnoxious a bill in our opinion, to the South, an account of its the Gulf Squadron, arrived at Pensacola on protective features generally, as the Northern the 22d inst., from a cruise in the Gulf, in Democrats could pass without octraging the search of Privateers.
